

you come to his castle, he dismisses you with the greatest civility and politeness imaginable; and I hope, as opportunity serves, that you will make it your business to imitate him.

Thus, then, I have given you a full description of the Enchanted Castle. If you have met with any thing in this account, which hath been the means of pointing out your duty, it will be your wisdom and your interest to pay a proper attention to it; and in so doing I can assure you, that you will confer a great obligation upon your very humble servant, Don Stephano Bunyano, and perhaps engage me to communicate some other accounts, which will be as entertaining as the Enchanted Castle.

C H A P.

C H A P. VI.

A DIALOGUE written by G
STRUCTION, for the Ent
of good Girls; between Mad Miss Julia, Lady Charlotte, Miss
Miss Sprightly, and Lady Maria

Miss Julia. GOOD morrow, Mademoiselle: I have good girl a great while, and ev in the house loves me so, that I am as a queen. Look at this pretty papa gave it me, to shew me how is pleased with my behaviour.

Mademoiselle. Oh! it is very But, my dear, you say you are as a queen; you suppose then, that a are happy!

Miss Julia. Yes, Mademoiselle is a common expression, when a contented, to say, 'she is as hap
'queen.'